DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 13-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Kato et al.

With respect to claim 13, figure 6 of Kato et al. shows a plurality of semiconductor elements (columns such as the one above 10A) on a substrate. Each column includes a plurality of channel areas, such as 3 in figure 5, which are subject to laser annealing (column 7, lines 1-5). All of the pixels are identical, so all channels have the same conductivity type. Each channel in a given column is electrically connected to the others (by line 8 in figure 6), and each of the channels in a column is arranged separately and in parallel to each other. With respect to claim 14, a "virtual channel width" can be chosen to contain spaces on one or both sides of a channel region, including spaces that do not contain silicon at all, and including spaces that are wider than the silicon channel itself, so that the "virtual channel width" would be larger than any defective area of the silicon. With respect to claim 15, see column 1, lines 38-40.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 10-12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kato et al.

Figure 2 of Kato et al. teaches a plurality of semiconductor elements such as columns above 1, where the channel areas are arranged separately and in different directions to each other. Laser annealing is taught at column 3, lines 1-10. It would have been obvious to make all of the transistors in the column-driving circuits of figure 2 of the same conductivity type (because the p-channel transistors would be of a different size as noted at column 5, lines 30-34), and it would have been obvious to provide electrical connections between the transistors in the column-driving circuits, because, as shown in figure 9, the column driving circuits must themselves be driven by addressing and other input circuits with interconnecting wiring. The limitations of claims 11 and 12 are taught by the reference, as noted above in the rejection of claims 14 and 15.
